. HIGHWAY 246 - DUSK

Freshly showered and dressed for dinner, Miles and Jack amble along the shoulder of this busy local two-lane highway. They pass a mall and a car dealership.

JACK

I thought you said it was close. Now I'm all pitted out.

MILES

It's not even a mile.

JACK

We should have driven.

MILES

Not with the wine list these people have. We don't want to hold back.

JACK

You think I'm making a mistake marrying Christine?

MILES

Whoa.

JACK

Come on, do you think I'm doing the right thing? Tell the truth. You've been through it.

MILES

Well, you waited for good reason, and you proposed to Christine for some good reason. So I think it's great. It's time. You've got to have your eyes open, that's all. I mean, look at me. I thought Victoria and I were set for life.

JACK

Mmmm

Christine's dad -- he's been talking about bringing me into his property business. Showing me the ropes. And that's something, considering how long it took him to get over I'm not Armenian? So I'm thinking about it. But I don't know, might get a little incestuous. But Mike does pretty well. A lot of high-end commercial stuff.

It's react

MILES

So you're going to stop acting?

Oh is it stopping

JACK

No way. This would just provide some stability is what I'm saying. I can always squeeze in an audition or a commercial here and there, you know, keep myself in the game in case something big comes along.

MILES

Uh-huh.

JACK

beat; yah, you yah me

We're not getting any younger, right? And my career, well, it's gotten pretty, you know, frustrating. Even with my new manager. Maybe it's time to settle down.

MILES

If that's what feels right.

JACK

(convincing himself)

It does. Feels right.

MILES

Then it's a good thing.

JACK

(nodding, feeling better)

Yeah. It's good. Feels good.
